LAST VESTIGE OF OLD CUBS FADES FROM BASEBALL WITH SALE OF FRANK SCHULTE

Ten years will do a great deal to a great ball club.

The average tenure of a ballplayer in the majors is less than ten years, and the changes that a decade will make are no better illustrated than by the Chicago Cubs, the wonder team of 1907, 1908 and 1910.

The unconditional release of Frank Schulte, one of the cogs of that machine, by Philadelphia marks the passing from the big leagues of the last of the famous outfit.

When Frank Schulte inherited his team from Frank Selee at the close of the 1905 season he had a well-rounded club which Chance strengthened by a couple of well-considered trades.
